

Headquote for Hawler

Contributed by df lewis
Monday, 06 August 2007
Last Updated Monday, 06 August 2007

Just discovered a headquote for my novel THE HAWLER (2005):

In a top front room of one of those grander houses, a young woman woke to find herself standing in the middle of a carpet. She often woke like this, and was not surprised; but she asked herself to what room the carpet belonged this time. From 'I Hear You Say So' a story by Elizabeth Bowen (1945)